Dr. George W. Johnston, author and playwright, will give a short talk on "What a small community can do."

Along Community Drama Lines." One of his latest plays will be read in parts by Miss Harriet Murphy, Maurice Jarvis and Lawrence Dawney.

Real estate always makes an in-coming during the late season when so many purchase property and arrange to have homes built before they return home. Some large tracts of land will be developed during the summer. The trend of travel is south along the Ocean Boulevard and the resorts on the ocean, including Boynton, Delray and Fort Lauderdale are developing.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew S. White, the latter formerly Miss Clara Howard of Washington, will visit Washington this spring on their way North to Syracuse, N. Y., from Pinehurst, where they are spending the early spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Barton A. Smith, of Toledo, Ohio, who have been at the Breakers for the season, have returned home for a short time preparatory to sailing for Europe.

Thomas William Hardwick, former Governor of Georgia, and one-time United States Senator, is spending the late season at The Breakers.

A BACHELOR'S INNOVATIONS.

When a bachelor sets himself up in an apartment of his own and undertakes to be a housewife, he usually has some eccentric ideas about altering customs that have been made correct by usage. A striking innovation is one that a single man has instituted in his small quarters. Mr. Housewife was his own decorator, and in gleefully arranging the appointments to suit his own taste and his own convenience made the bath tub the principal article of furniture in his luxurious bedroom.

"Why not?" he said. "I like a cold plunge—and then rest between blankets. My tub is placed on a low block of malachite. It is arranged sideways to the wall, and the decorative silver spigots are not at one end but at the middle on the wall side. Above the tub is a narrow shelf holding bottles. Over this hangs a beautiful oval painting with its longest line horizontal. This is flanked by clusters of electric candle lights, and under the lights is a pair of round pictures of ancient architecture.

The furniture is of brown walnut. Two chairs have rush seats. A chest of drawers, with a marble top, has a good, round framed mirror suspended above it. There is no dresser cover. Nothing is on the dresser top but a pair of good sized Japanese vases and a locked rosewood box.

The bed is director in shape, and is covered with a spread made of tiger skin. This is so generously proportioned that it tucks in all the way around. The bed is placed sideways to the wall. In its day dressing it has a soft velvet bolster at the head and a large round puff pillow, and two upright square pillows leaning against the wall. On the floor is a foot pillow of black velvet.

Innovations in the remainder of the apartment are not so startling. The whole thing is lovely enough to warrant description. It is palpably the work of a man of culture and taste, and is a masterpiece of entertaining so exquisitely that it is counted a privilege to be among his chosen guests.

The reception hall is papered with dull gilded canvas, and a portiere hides from view the adjoining living room and dining room. It is just the tiniest reception hall, yet it is interesting. At one side is a mantel of malachite marble with an open fireplace. A pair of pagoda bronze lanterns, instead of being suspended, rests on the mantel shelf at the ends, with a low bowl holding a jade tree of flowers between.

A triangular shelf built in the corner of the wall is painted black and has a narrow panel of black embroidered satin hanging straight down to the floor at either extremity. This leaves a wide opening between the two panels, disclosing a golden Buddha on a small triangular table. The glow of the statue is intensified by electric lights which are concealed behind the panels and, shining full on the statue, cast a shadow at both sides of it.

The table is covered with an Oriental embroidered piece of crimson satin. Directly before it on the floor is an incense burner, placed directly between a pair of highly ornamental Oriental sandals. These are within the inclosure. Outside of it on the floor are a carved ivory sword and a long, soft prayer pillow. On the shelf forming the top of the inclosure is another bronze lantern. Across from the fireplace is a wide spring upholstered bench raised one step up and covered with brocade and pillows. There is no movable furniture in this room, yet it has comfort, mystery and charm.

The doorway leading into the living room is an arched opening. Crossing it is a square pole set down about a foot from the top. This is fitted with square curtain rings instead of the regulation round rings. The portiere is of jade green taffeta. A row of jade glass beads as big as marbles are sewn to its lower edge, weighting it down nicely. The portiere is dropped about eight inches from the pole at the top and is connected with the rings by means of jade green silk cords. The effect is pleasing. This handling we gladly suggest to any one of our readers who find on moving into new quarters that their portieres are too short to fit the changed door space.

Lovely is the decorative appearance of the doorway between the living room and dining room. The opening is Gothic arched, and neither portieres, doors, nor screens are used. Instead is a graceful wrought iron double gate. The walls are painted a pale tint of jade green. A cornice, artfully curved, has the electric lights which illuminate the living room concealed behind it. On the wall in lieu of pictures are several wonderful specimens of batik.

The dining room has no cornice. Side lights are supplied in clusters, with wrought iron candle brackets, and these are supplemented by three branched candlesticks holding wax candles. A long, low walnut sideboard nearly fills one end of the room. Above this is a medallion bas-relief. The only other wall ornament, for there are no pictures, is a cunningly modeled wall fountain. The floors of both rooms are completely covered with velvet carpets of deep dull jade green.

The back porch has been glassed in and made into a breakfast room. The walls and furniture are painted in two tints of light lemon yellow, with trimmings of Wedgwood blue. The floor is covered with a huckleberry blue carpet. The blue silk lamp shade, made over intense blue glass, casts a curious light, changing the color scheme to green at night.

The kitchen is cheery. The wall is light gray green. There are no china closets, but shelves have been knocked into the wall. The woodwork of these is stained dark brown. The shelves are shallow. The plates, rarely decorated, are stood upright behind protecting strips of wood which are painted bright scarlet. A grandfather's clock ticks pleasantly in one corner. Beneath a dish rack stands an open cupboard with open shelves on credit to a living room. Pots and pans are huddled behind its concealing doors, and silver and napery are in its drawers. Several square stools have square backs and cushions on them, and these have slip covers of green plaid gingham. The rather long lower sash curtains are of green chambray, and the show upper ones are of white Swiss.

Don't you think this is a fascinating little apartment for a male person to have interior decked all by himself? It almost makes one's mouth water to admit it lacks nothing—not even the much vaunted feminine touch!
